The logo for the Rogers Park Business Alliance. It features a graphic of five overlapping rectangles in various colors (yellow, light blue, dark blue, red, teal) of different widths arranged vertically. To the right of the graphic, the words "ROGERS PARK BUSINESS ALLIANCE" are written in a bold, black, sans-serif font, with each word on a new line.

Walk 2:

BEGIN on Howard behind 1615 W. Howard to see the vibrant Big Fruit mural and then walk east on Howard. You'll spot The Birds Have Landed on just two blocks east the Creative Collective mural depicting everyday life. Walk west toward the Metra train tracks and make your way alongside the Metra tracks south to see a series of Participatory Budgeting murals on the underpasses. Once you reach Lunt turn left (east) to visit Rogers Park Monstro on Clark. End your walk with some tasty flavors at any of the many Clark St. restaurants.

A vibrant, abstract mural of a lung or heart shape. The main body of the shape is filled with various colors including red, orange, yellow, green, and blue. Within these colors, there are numerous small, stylized shapes resembling red blood cells and green leaves. A single, long, thin blue tube extends from the bottom right corner of the main shape.

Explore Public Art In Rogers Park

Howard Street hosts 8 art pieces highlighting a sophisticated, unique district with many historical buildings, eateries, diverse shops and public transportation.

Between 2010 and 2015, the 49th Ward commissioned 38 Participatory Budgeting Murals by Chicago artists on Metra and CTA underpasses, through a community participation process.

Along the CTA Glenwood Avenue embankment, the Mile of Murals offers color and story through 12 large-scale works, consisting of 6 block-long pieces, 5 viaducts and one overpass totaling over 14,000 sq feet of painted walls.

The campus at Loyola University is full of statues and sculptures: Some are large and well known, others are small and off the beaten path. Each tells a story.

More Public Art can be found on Clark Street, in Touhy Park, in the Glenwood Avenue Sculpture Garden and at Tobey Prinz Beach Park, home of a striking sculpture and the annual community-painted Artists of the Wall bench.
